

Funding Opportunities Guide

Master of Arts in Applied Child & Adolescent Psychology: Prevention & Treatment

Disclaimer

Before you read this document, read over the Financial Aid section of our Costs & Financial Aid website.

This guide is meant to be an informal resource for prospective students to help identify and apply for funding outside of the Free Application for Federal Student Aid \(FAFSA\). It is not exhaustive, and it excludes scholarships and awards that are valued at less than $1,000. The awards included have not been individually researched or vetted by program staff.

This document includes funding opportunities for individuals from identified minority and marginalized demographics. It is not our intention to exclude individuals from groups not listed. If you are aware of funding opportunities not listed for individuals like you or from other backgrounds, please email psychma@uw.edu so that it can be reviewed for inclusion in this guide.

This guide is not updated on a regular basis and may include outdated information and broken links, but we hope that it will still provide a good starting point in your funding search.

General Information

Before you pursue any funding option, you'll want to make sure it is coming from a legitimate source. The Federal Trade Commission has a useful website with tips on spotting scams.

Make a note of application deadlines. Many deadlines occur before our program's application due date. It is acceptable and expected that you will apply for funding before you receive an offer of admission.

You'll also want to be certain that the funding option applies to programs like ours (a fee-based Master of Arts program without a research element or a thesis/dissertation). The organization may require the applicant to be in a program with a specific type of accreditation. There may also be terms about full- vs. part-time, and definitions of full- and part-time enrollment that differ from ours.

Lastly, you want to be sure you understand the terms of the award. Does it require any follow-up action for the recipient? How does the money get dispersed—to the individual or to the school? Are there rules for how the money can be spent? Is all or part of the award a loan? If so, what are the loan's terms?

Your Collaboration

We hope to update this resource based on the experiences and achievements of our students. If there is a specific funding source you believe we should identify here, please email psychma@uw.edu.

In addition, we hope to list awards and scholarships granted to our students. If you receive any funding outside of Federal Student Aid, please email psychma@uw.edu so that your award can be added to this document as a funding option for future students to consider. Your personal information will be kept anonymous. Your email should include:

- The name of the award, scholarship, or fellowship
- Whether it is an award or a loan (meaning that at least a portion of it must be paid back in the future)
- The funding organization's website
- The dollar amount of its value
- Potential drawbacks
- Other general information you feel it would benefit applicants to know

Databases

TheWashBoard.org helps connect Washington state students with in-state scholarship opportunities.

Some colleges and universities offer a graduate funding resource or have a funding expert on staff. If you are a current or admitted graduate student of the University of Washington, this resource is the Graduate Funding Information Service \(GFIS\). Some sections of the GFIS website and linked resources are available only to currently enrolled students, including the large GrantForward database. However, GFIS also connects users to publicly accessible funding databases, such as the UCLA Graduate and Postdoctoral Extramural Support \(GRAPES\) database and the MSU Grants to Individuals site (you do not need to be affiliated with these schools in order to access these resources and they contain opportunities relevant to all graduate students).

GFIS also maintains a funding blog that posts both UW-specific and external funding opportunities appropriate to new or continuing graduate students, including tuition, travel, conference, and research funding options. Opportunities are posted on a rolling basis, approximately 4-6 weeks before the relevant deadlines, so keeping up with the blog will ensure you are aware of major graduate funding sources.

If you are outside of the UW system, you may want to check with your own undergraduate institution to see if they have a graduate funding resource you can consult with.
